Obitunderiam lab

Butterick has some very strong opinions about type and dos and don'ts that he feels should always be applied. One that struck out to me that made no sense is his strong dislike for TIMES NEW ROMAN font. Butterick says that because the font is free the font must automatically be bad. Butterick uses the term "sloppy" to describe the type. While there may be better types out there I have to wonder why ev-

Butterick uses the term "sloppy" to describe the type. While there may be better types out there I have to wonder why every teacher always request TIMES NEW ROMAN as the font for big essays and papers. I understand that free things may not have the quality that some non-free things have it the use that TIMES NEW ROMAN gets have got to make it the best free

BAYERN

Butterick has some very strong opinions about type and dos and don'ts that he feels should always be applied. One that struck out to me that made no sense is his strong dislike for TIMES NEW ROMAN font. Butterick says that because the font is free the font must automatically be bad. Butterick uses the term "sloppy" to describe the type. While there may be better types out there I have to wonder why every teacher always request TIMES NEW ROMAN as the font for big essays and papers. I understand that free things may not have the quality that some non-free things have it the use that TIMES NEW ROMAN gets have got to make it the best free font. Something else that really makes me question Butterick views is that he says "start every project by making the body text look good". Now I can't argue that the body text should look good but in my opinion it is the header that should look the best and get most of the attention because it is the header that often grabsthe readers attention. doloreped et elesequate voles-tium eicabor aut ex eatur, tem nem quia qui dolorem.
